DESCRIPTION

During a period of forward-looking post-war optimism, Mathieu Matégot (1910–2001) put his own material innovation, Rigitulle, to work in his Satellite Collection, named with nod and a wink to the scientific progress in France at the time. Rigitulle enabled Matégot to reinvent the traditional lampshade, conceiving a playful new typology for lighting.

The Satellite Wall Lamp (1953) comprises two shades made from his perforated steel, concertina-folded into ovoid forms, and mounted onto elongated sculptural metal arms. Today, after almost 70 years, GUBI is putting this daring design back into production alongside the Satellite Pendant and Flower Pots and Bowl – also made from Rigitulle – and Matégot's ingenious furniture designs, such as the Démon Shelves and Copacabana and Nagasaki Chairs, all of which are already part of the GUBI Collection.
